

I strongly urge the commission to resist business interests and allow Wisconsin (and other states) to retain their present "No Call" list. I am appalled that telemarketers might be able to call us for 18 months after discontinuing a service.

It is unfortunate that the federal law is weaker and thus make life more complicated for these telemarketers, but those of us living in states with the backbone to pass strong consumer protection should not be penalized.

Since the inception of "No Call", our daily life has been very peaceful and dinner is always eaten hot, without interruption.

Leave it up to the consumer to initiate a service - if a consumer wants to resume a service, they will; they do not need to be pestered - which is all telemarketing amounts to.

Thank you.
